Ⓞ The Story So Far

A few weeks ago, a ship called Mary's Despair docked in the port of Boston. She carried an innocent cargo of bananas from Honduras. Or so her crew thought. A creature called a "husker" had crept aboard Mary's Despair the night before the ship sailed for Boston. The thing is a man-sized, insect-like monster with the extraordinarily nasty habit of reproducing by planting its eggs inside other animals.

Once Mary's Despair docked, the monster multiplying—at the expense of a number of the crew. It wasn't long before the Agency's office in Tomstone identified the problem and took husker infestation.

Problem Solved...?

A few days burned buildings, and corpse was well in hand. However, the field agent was a type of abomination they had never seen. After a high level conference in Washing decided the creature warranted further study.

They left one of the monsters alive. The creature was too dangerous to leave on the East Coast, however, so they arranged to ship it to one of its remote Western offices.

Two field operatives, Laura Giles and Ali, assigned to guard the shipment as it traveled across the country. The assignment has been an easy assignment.

This is where the heroes come in.

Bushwhacked!

Philip Clarkson gave a law-abiding life a whole month. Now he's moving up to the train robbery. He's rinned a trestle over

Ⓞ The Setup

This is the easy part—all that's necessary to begin the adventure is that the posse be riding on the Skyline Steamer, a west-bound Denver-Pacific train somewhere in the Rocky Mountains. Have each of the players tell you why their characters are heading further west. They could have boarded the train anywhere from Boston to Denver, so you can accommodate a wide variety of character types.

You can have some of the characters want, or make them all want, for an easier way to get a posse together.

Ⓞ Chapter One: Tickets Please!

The first portion of the adventure is intended to let the players get a feel for the Skyline Steamer, its crew, and passengers. If they're strangers, they also have a little time to meet each other and introduce their characters.

As mentioned before, the point of departure and destination aren't really important to the adventure's plot—use whatever works for your particular game!

The story picks up as the train climbs into the higher elevations of the Rocky Mountains.

- Ⓞ The Train
- Ⓞ The Agents
- Ⓞ Fellow Passengers

Let the players get into their characters and get to know each other better by passing a little time before the action starts in the next chapter. In the Passin' The Time story element are a few subplots you can use to keep things happening if the posse doesn't get into trouble on their own.
